

Rules Cyclopeda Addendum

The purpose of this document is to detail how race and class can be separated when using the D&D Rules Cyclopeda. This document also details very simple class options that can be employed to mimic classes found in other forms of Dungeons and Dragons.

The first section gives details for seven standard player character races that can be used in your game. The ability score requirements for playing a member of that race are listed first. After that, it is noted in each description that a character's prime requisites, experience bonus criteria, and hit dice are always a function of the character's class. The maximum level for all characters is 36th. However, all non-humans have different advancement tables showing the experience points needed for each level. Humans have the fastest advancement tables; they are based on the four human character classes found in the Rules Cyclopeda. Demi-human advancement tables have been derived by taking into account the experience point "addition" each race receives in the Variant Rules section of the Cyclopeda. The allowed armor and weapons are listed for that race next. Any special abilities and damage resistances come after. All languages known by characters of that race are shown next. The last section details the adjustments that apply to a character's saving throws. This number is not a penalty, even though it is negative. Lower the character's saving throw by this amount, with the base saving throw coming from the character's class saving throw chart. Demi-human minimum saving throws are not always '2' either. The lowest saving throw a member of that race can have is shown. For example, dwarves have a -4 adjustment to their Magic Wands saving throw. This means that a dwarven cleric will start with an 8 (12 - 4), a dwarven fighter with a 9 (13 - 4), and a dwarven thief with a 10 (14 - 4). The lowest saving throw that any dwarven character can have in Magic Wands is '3' as listed in the entry for dwarves.

Following this section is a similar section for humanoids. Humanoids have ability score adjustments and maximums, unlike humans and demi-humans. This section is primarily for DMs who may want to create NPCs of humanoid races that also have a character class. The Orcs of Thar gazetteer supplement was used as inspiration.

The five basic classes from the Rules Cyclopeda are detailed next. After this, six multi-class options are listed. Four basic classes are paired with one another to simulate a class that is actually a multi-class as presented in other early forms of D&D. Following these two sections, a number of class options are described. These entail some of the higher level options described, such as knight and druid, that should be made available to 1st level characters. Other options represent simplified "sub-classes" that can be taken as options at 1st level, such as bard, illusionist, and assassin. For hit dice and top out hit points, two values are listed for each class. The first represents the standard hit dice and top out hit points found in the Rules Cyclopeda. The second values represent the higher hit dice found in AD&D. Either can be used, depending on the preference of the DM. A short discussion on using all of the options presented in this document follows. Finally, experience point charts for the various races are given. The illusionist spell list and a note about the mystic's acrobatics special ability ends the document.

Although this document details quite a number of changes and additions, DMs can ignore most of these various options and simply use this document to divorce race from class. If this is desired, use only the dwarf, elf, halfling, and human races along with the cleric, fighter, magic-user, and thief classes. Then you will have sixteen race-class combinations as opposed to the seven that are described in the Rules Cyclopeda.

* Consider a humanoid's Charisma to be 21 minus the actual Charisma score when dealing with humanoid races and the listed score when dealing with humans and demi-humans. Therefore, "low" Charisma humanoids are the leaders in humanoid society and those who would be able to interact better with humans and demi-humans are the outcasts and freaks.

Class Options

All class options listed below can be taken at 1st level. If the DM permits, options can be chosen at later levels by characters having the class listed in parenthesis. Characters may only choose one option for that class, multiple options are not allowed. For example, a thief can choose to be a bard or an assassin, but not both. Multi-class characters may choose two options, one for each class as long as they are compatible. A fighter/thief cannot, for instance, become a paladin/assassin.

Avenger (Fighter)

Attack Progression: As thief.
Saving Throws: As thief.
Special Abilities: As thief of two-thirds assassin level (round up). Assassins also have special abilities derived from the Headsman (Thug) monster listed in the Rules Cyclopedica. Assassins of 6th level or higher may disguise themselves and are 90% undetectable in their disguises. At 10th level, assassins may use all three alignment languages. Assassins can surprise on a 1-3 roll of a d6 (not the normal 1-2) if they make preparations beforehand as listed in the Headsman entry. If a prepared assassin gains surprise, an opponent may be slain with a single blow, as a Thug. However, the DM may rule that an assassination attempt cannot be made or is unsuccessful regardless of any roll. Assassins are typically neutral, but can be lawful or chaotic. All are evil, regardless of alignment, as the secret killing of intelligent beings is almost always at odds with the ethos of goodness.

Bard (Thief)

Prime Requisites:	Intelligence and Dexterity.
Experience Bonus:	If Int and Dex are 13 or better, +5%; if both are 16 or better, +10%. If at least one prime requisite is 6-8, -10%; if at least one is 3-5, -20%.

Special Abilities:	As thief of two-thirds bard level (round up), as magic-user of one-third bard level (round down). Bards can cast spells from both the magic-user and illusionist spell lists. Bards can counter the effects of sound-based attacks by playing their instrument. This applies to the attacks of harpies, shriekers, banshees and the like. Bards are immune to sound-based attacks.

Berserker (Fighter)

Prime Requisites:	Strength.
Experience Bonus:	If Str is 13 or better, +5%; if Str is 16 or better, +10%. If Str is 6-8, -10%; if Str is 3-5, -20%.
Standard Hit Dice:	d8 with +2 per level after 9th.

Special Abilities:	Berserker is an option much like paladin and avenger. A berserker cannot be lawful. The berserker's special ability is rage . If the berserker decides to rage, he receives a +2 to attack rolls and must attack an opponent once per round, fighting to the death. If no enemies are available to attack, the berserker must attack allies. The berserker must make a saving throw vs. spells to come out of a rage once it is begun. The berserker may decide to come out of a rage at any time after initiating it. Berserkers may become land-owning or traveling fighters at 9th level or above but never any of the fighter sub-class options (such as knight, avenger, or ranger).

Druid (Cleric)

Prime Requisites:	Wisdom.
Experience Bonus:	If Wis is 13 or better, +5%; if Wis is 16 or better, +10%. If Wis is 6-8, -10%; if Wis is 3-5, -20%.
Standard Hit Dice:	d6 with +1 per level after 9th.
Higher Hit Dice:	d8 with +2 per level after 9th.
Maximum Level:	36th, use cleric advancement charts.
Alignment:	Neutral only. Druids cannot be lawful or chaotic.
Armor:	Leather armor, shield permitted if made of only wood and leather (but see below).
Weapons:	No edged or pointed weapons; all other weapons permitted as long as they are not made of metal (but see below). Racial limitations apply.
Attack Progression:	As cleric.
Saving Throws:	As cleric.
Special Abilities:	See the Rules Cyclopedia for most rules concerning druids. There are a few changes, however. Druids have the ability to use polymorph self (as the magic-user spell) a number of times per day equal to their level divided by three (round down). When using this special ability, druids are limited to taking the forms of normal animals, giant animals, prehistoric animals, humanoids, dragons, or lowlives. All of the druid's equipment melds into the new form, unless it is made of "dead" material. Contrary to what is listed in the Rules Cyclopedia, druids can use "dead" weapons and armor, but are loath to do so because of this limitation. Refer to the Rules Cyclopedia for additional details on the druid class.

Illusionist (Magic-user)

Prime Requisites:	Intelligence and Dexterity.
Experience Bonus:	If Int and Dex are 13 or better, +5%; if both are 16 or better, +10%. If at least one prime requisite is 6-8, -10%; if at least one is 3-5, -20%.

Higher Hit Dice:	d4 with +1 per level after 9th.
Maximum Level:	36th, use magic-user advancement charts.
Alignment:	Lawful, chaotic, or neutral.
Armor:	None, no shield permitted.
Weapons:	Dagger only.
Attack Progression:	As magic-user.
Saving Throws:	As magic-user.
Special Abilities:	As magic-user of the same level. However, illusionists have their own spell list, which is distinct from that of magic-users. DMs can use either the AD&D illusionist spell list, with appropriate conversions or the Labyrinth Lord Advanced Edition Companion illusionist spell list. At any rate, "standard" illusionist spells of 8th and 9th level are not readily available in the campaign world as illusionists are a secretive lot and do not ever reveal the exact nature of their most powerful spells. Player character illusionists are encouraged to conduct spell research to fill their spellbooks with 8th or 9th level spells when they reach appropriate experience levels.

Knight (Fighter)

Prime Requisites:	Strength.
Experience Bonus:	If Str is 13 or better, +5%; if Str is 16 or better, +10%. If Str is 6-8, -10%; if Str is 3-5, -20%.
Standard Hit Dice:	d8 with +2 per level after 9th.
Higher Hit Dice:	d10 with +3 per level after 9th.
Maximum Level:	36th, use fighter advancement charts.
Alignment:	Lawful, chaotic, or neutral.
Armor:	Any, shields allowed.
Weapons:	Any. Racial limitations apply.
Attack Progression:	As fighter.
Saving Throws:	As fighter.
Special Abilities:	See the Rules Cyclopeda for most rules concerning knights. One additional special ability applies. As the most elite of fighters, knights use the monster attack tables when wielding melee weapons. Treat a knight's level as his "hit dice" and use the attack roll table for monsters. If the knight has a Constitution bonus (a positive modifier) then use the "plus" row. For example, a 1st level knight with Constitution 13 uses the "1+ to 2" row and needs an 18 to hit armor class zero with melee weapons. All other rules concerning knights from the Rules Cyclopeda applies.

Paladin (Fighter)

Prime Requisites:	Strength.
Experience Bonus:	If Str is 13 or better, +5%; if Str is 16 or better, +10%. If Str is 6-8, -10%; if Str is 3-5, -20%.
Standard Hit Dice:	d8 with +2 per level after 9th.
Higher Hit Dice:	d10 with +3 per level after 9th.

Special Abilities:	See the Rules Cyclopeda for rules concerning paladins.

Ranger (Fighter)

Prime Requisites:	Strength.
Experience Bonus:	If Str is 13 or better, +5%; if Str is 16 or better, +10%. If Str is 6-8, -10%; if Str is 3-5, -20%.
Standard Hit Dice:	d8 with +2 per level after 9th.
Higher Hit Dice:	d10 with +3 per level after 9th.
Maximum Level:	36th, use fighter advancement charts.
Alignment:	Neutral only. Rangers are almost always "good" as well.
Armor:	Any, shields allowed.
Weapons:	Any. Racial limitations apply.
Attack Progression:	As fighter.
Saving Throws:	As fighter.
Special Abilities:	Ranger is an option much like paladin and avenger. The prerequisites and special abilities of the ranger are listed below: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. The ranger makes a pact of mutual aid and protection with a neutral druidical order. A ranger must always remain neutral.2. The ranger gains the ability to detect danger (as the druid spell) as often as once per round simply by concentrating.3. The ranger gains spellcasting ability as a druid of one-third his fighter level (round down) if his Wisdom is 13 or better.4. Rangers gain no ability to turn undead.5. A ranger can travel with a number of hirelings equal to or less than his druid spellcasting level.6. A ranger must assist decent and honest folk (as paladins do). Although he is neutral with respect to law and chaos, he is still good-hearted.7. The DM may determine that the ranger gains additional special abilities that relate to overland travel and woodcraft.

Using Races, Classes, Multi-Classes, and Class Options

During character generation, the player has a lot more options now when using the Rules Cyclopedia. Players must choose a race for their character as well as a class or multi-class. Furthermore, there are various class options, normally available at 9th level, that should be considered at start.

Implement these options in the following manner:

1. Choose a race for your character.
2. Decide whether you want a character with a single class or two classes.
3. Choose your class or multi-class.
4. Once you have chosen your class or classes, decide if you want to choose one (or two) option(s) for your character's class(es).

Allowed Race, Class, Multi-Class, and Class Option Combinations

Race

Under these basic rules, there are no racial limitations on class selection. Your DM may have restrictions depending on the nature of the campaign world. Some typical restrictions are listed below.

Dwarf	Limited to cleric, fighter, and thief.
Elf	Limited to cleric, fighter, magic-user, and thief.
Gnome	Limited to cleric, fighter, illusionist (magic-user option), and thief.
Halfling	Limited to cleric, fighter, and thief.
Half-Elf	Limited to cleric, fighter, magic-user, and thief.
Half-Orc	Limited to cleric, fighter, and thief.
Humans	All classes (cleric, fighter, magic-user, mystic, and thief).

Non-humans may choose any multi-class based on two classes that are permitted. A typical restriction for humans is that they may not pursue a multi-class. It is worth repeating that these are merely typical restrictions based on previous versions of D&D. This document does not necessarily advocate using these restrictions.

Multi-Class

Any two of the cleric, fighter, magic-user, and thief classes may be combined as a multi-class. It is suggested that due to the nature of the mystic class, no character should pursue a multi-class option using mystic. However, if the DM desires to use multi-class mystics, then the mystic can take the place of the fighter class in any multi-class combination. Use the appropriate advancement charts (such as "F/M" for mystic/magic-users and "F/C" for mystic/clerics). If the DM allows the fighter/mystic multi-class, then use the "C/M" advancement charts.

Class Options

All class options are listed below:

Cleric	Land-Owning Cleric, Traveling Cleric, and Druid. These three are mutually exclusive. This means that a cleric can choose only one of these options.
Fighter	Land-Owning Fighter, and Traveling Fighter (Paladin, Knight, Avenger, Berserker, or Ranger). Land-Owning and Traveling are mutually exclusive. Paladin, Knight, Avenger, Berserker, and Ranger are mutually exclusive. This means that a fighter can choose to be a paladin, knight, avenger, berserker, ranger or (eventually) a land-owning fighter, but can choose only one of these options.
Magic-user	Independent Wizard, Magist, and Magus. These three are mutually exclusive. Any of these can be coupled with illusionist, however.
Thief	Land-Owning Thief and Traveling Thief. These two are mutually exclusive. A thief also has the options of being an assassin, bard, or remaining a classic thief. These options are also mutually exclusive. An option from the first set can be combined with an option from the second set, such as "land-owning assassin" and "traveling bard."
Mystic	Mystics have no class options.

Class Options and Multi-Classes

A character with a multi-class can choose one class option for each of his classes unless the DM deems the two options incompatible. Some examples of possible incompatibility include: choosing a land-owning option from one class and a traveling option from the other; choosing two options with seemingly incompatible alignments (such as paladin/assassin and druid/avenger); and choosing two options that don't "feel right" together (like berserker/magic-user or druid/knight). DMs, as always, reserve the right to allow or forbid any combination of options.

Examples

A simple list of character type examples might prove helpful. Note that these represent just a few of the many options available.

1. Dwarven berserker (a dwarf fighter with the berserker option)
2. Elven druid/magic-user (an elven cleric/magic-user with the druid option)
3. Gnomish illusionist/assassin (a gnomish character that has taken two options)
4. Halfling ranger/thief (a halfling fighter/thief with the ranger option)
5. Half-elven paladin/cleric (a half-elven fighter/cleric with the paladin option)
6. Half-orc fighter (just a straight up half-orc fighter. He can be a land-owner at higher levels)
7. Human illusionist (a human character with the illusionist option)
8. Half-orc avenger/assassin (a nasty character)
9. Human mystic/magic-user (unarmored, unarmed, and exceptionally deadly)

There are many, many combinations and character types that can be created with this system. The DM exercises final authority on what's allowed in the campaign, as ever.

Illusionist Spell List

The illusionist spell list below is taken from the Labyrinth Lord Advanced Edition Companion. Because illusionists in this Rules Cyclopeda Addendum are modeled on the magic-user class, there are nine levels of spells for illusionists instead of seven. Acrobatics

The mystic's acrobatics special ability can be added on to another class by raising the experience point total of that class' advancement table. Use the following additions. This would be especially appropriate for thieves if you want to simulate the thief-acrobat class.

Level	XP Add-On	Level	XP Add-On	Level	XP Add-On	Level	XP Add-On
1	+0	10	+90,000	19	+360,000	28	+630,000
2	+500	11	+120,000	20	+390,000	29	+660,000
3	+1,000	12	+150,000	21	+420,000	30	+690,000
4	+2,000	13	+180,000	22	+450,000	31	+720,000
5	+4,000	14	+210,000	23	+480,000	32	+750,000
6	+8,000	15	+240,000	24	+510,000	33	+780,000
7	+16,000	16	+270,000	25	+540,000	34	+810,000
8	+30,000	17	+300,000	26	+570,000	35	+840,000
9	+60,000	18	+330,000	27	+600,000	36	+870,000

Thus, the experience points required for a 36th level human thief-acrobat would be 3,400,000 XP plus 870,000 XP for a total of 4,270,000 XP. The experience point total for a 36th level halfling or gnome fighter/magic-user with acrobatics is 11,820,000 XP and is the most required for 36th level in the entire game.

Using Material from Other Editions of D&D

It is obvious that a wealth of information and additional gaming materials can be gleaned from other editions of D&D, vis. AD&D. What should be used from other editions, and how should it be used?

Spells

There are thousands of spells detailed for other editions of D&D. All difficulties in converting spells from AD&D or D&D Third Edition cannot be anticipated. When deciding to use a spell, the DM should read the spell description carefully and compare that spell to others in the Rules Cyclopeda of the same level and for the same class. Range, Duration, and Effect are the only spell statistics, all others should be ignored. These statistics should remain the same, if possible. If this is not possible, find spells that are close to the spell you want to use in your campaign and adjust the spell statistics accordingly. Make sure that the new spell is neither too weak nor too powerful and obeys all of the established conventions for spells in the Rules Cyclopeda.

All spells should convert to the same spell level as the source material. For 8th and 9th level cleric and druid spells converted from D&D Third Edition, use the following guideline. Make these spells 7th level and require the cleric or druid to be at least 22nd level to use spells that were formerly 8th level and 27th level to use spells that were formerly 9th level. The precedent for such a guideline is the cleric version of the wish spell on page 40 which requires that the cleric be 36th level.

Because the illusionist in this Addendum is based on the magic-user class, you may have some difficulty finding high level spells. Illusionists in AD&D have seven levels of spells, while specialist illusionists in D&D Third Edition have nine. The spell level of illusionist spells found in AD&D should take precedence over their equivalents in D&D Third Edition. Also check the effects of spells having the same name. The shades spell in AD&D is a 6th level illusionist spell and is the equivalent of shadow conjuration, greater in D&D Third Edition. The shades spell in Third Edition actually has no equivalent in other forms of D&D and would make a good 9th level spell for illusionists in this system. The 7th level illusionist spell weird in AD&D and the 9th level illusionist spell weird in Third Edition are entirely different spells and both can be used, for instance.

One last note, if the spell already has a version in the Rules Cyclopeda, use that version.

Monsters

When using a monster from another version of D&D, make sure that you keep its "power level" the same during the conversion. You can do this by first comparing the instances of one type of monster that appears in both versions (such as hill giant or chimera). The monster chosen should be roughly the same hit dice as the monster that you're converting. You can also check other monster types with similar abilities or roles. Another method is to find two monsters that have equivalents in both the Rules Cyclopeda and the system you're taking the new monster from. One monster should be slightly more powerful while the other slightly less. Once you've converted the monster for use with the Rules Cyclopeda make sure that your creation's power level is still in between the two monsters you chose for comparison.

If a monster already has a version in the Rules Cyclopeda, use that version. Appendix 2 in the Rules Cyclopeda offers good information on conversions from AD&D 2nd Edition.

Magical Items

It should be fairly easy to convert magical items from other forms of D&D. Many magical items are more complicated, but this should be a problem for most groups. As always, if an item already exists in the Rules Cyclopeda, just use that item. Experience points are never gained for magical items according to the Rules Cyclopeda.

Skills

If you wish to use the skills found in D&D Third Edition, then use the following guidelines. Assume that the character has the number of indicated ranks in each skill:

Class Skill Ranks = 3 + 1 rank per level (1st to 12th level) + 1 rank per three levels (13th to 36th)

Cross-Class Skill Ranks = 1 rank per two levels (1st to 12th) + 1 rank per six levels (13th to 36th)

The table below summarizes these formulae:

Level	Class Skill Ranks	X-Class Skill Ranks	Level	Class Skill Ranks	X-Class Skill Ranks	Level	Class Skill Ranks	X-Class Skill Ranks	Level	Class Skill Ranks	X-Class Skill Ranks
1	4	0	10	13	5	19	17	7	28	20	8
2	5	1	11	14	5	20	17	7	29	20	8
3	6	1	12	15	6	21	18	7	30	21	9
4	7	2	13	15	6	22	18	7	31	21	9
5	8	2	14	15	6	23	18	7	32	21	9
6	9	3	15	16	6	24	19	8	33	22	9
7	10	3	16	16	6	25	19	8	34	22	9
8	11	4	17	16	6	26	19	8	35	22	9
9	12	4	18	17	7	27	20	8	36	23	10

To determine whether a skill is a class skill or a cross-class skill, simply find the closest character class in Third Edition matching a character's class as detailed in this Addendum. For multi-classed characters, use the class lists from both classes, but subtract three from each class skill unless it appears on both class skill lists.

Feats and Class Special Abilities

Most feats from Third Edition are unnecessary, because the game presented in the Rules Cyclopeda is so different from that of Third Edition. However, you may wish to use certain class special abilities to further round out their equivalents in this addendum. Take care that you do not make one class dominate all others. For example, if you were to grant rangers all of the special abilities found in AD&D, they would instantly become better than any other fighting character class. Use class abilities sparingly, if at all, and always tie their acquisition to something actually occurring in the game world. For instance, perhaps a ranger character learns the secret of tracking from an extremely high level ranger and thus, you introduce "tracking" into your campaign.

Alignment

If you wish to use the two-axis alignment system, you certainly can. Look to AD&D for inspiration on the new alignments for each of your monsters. The recommended alignments for character classes are listed below. You may, of course, allow any alignment desired.

Class	Recommended Alignments	Class	Recommended Alignments
Cleric	Any	Magic-user	Any
Druid	True Neutral	Illusionist	Any
Fighter	Any	Thief	Any (most are non-good)
Avenger	any chaotic (most are non-good as well)	Assassin	any evil
Berserker	any non-lawful	Bard	any neutral
Knight	Any	Mystic	Any (most are lawful)
Ranger	Neutral Good and True Neutral	Multi-classed	alignments that will meet both restrictions
Paladin	Lawful Good and Lawful Neutral

Equipment

Equipment found in other editions should translate directly. If a player must have his fighter use a Bohemian Ear-Spoon, then let him. For weapons, always use the S-M damage. Keep in mind that the armor class system in the Rules Cyclopeda is slightly different than the system found in other forms of D&D. If you want to use an armor type found in another variant of D&D, make sure the AC of that type translates appropriately. Suggested armor classes are listed below. Costs should be based on the cost of the armor providing the same AC in the Rules Cyclopeda. For example, a chain shirt costs the same as scale mail. Encumbrance is likewise the same. Essentially, the game effects of other armor types are the same, it is the flavor that is different.

An unarmored character by the Rules Cyclopeda is AC 9. However, in other forms of D&D the unarmored character is AC 10. To account for this difference, two new armor types are created. Padded armor gives its wearer AC 8 and can be worn by all characters except for magic-users. However, AC 9 is granted by heavy clothing, an adventurer's outfit, heavy robes, and the like. It is assumed now that all "unarmored" characters are actually wearing this type of garment, which magic-users can take full advantage of. Thus the "unarmored" AC remains 9. However, for the truly unarmored (the naked, the scantily clad, or the pajama wearer) the DM should make that AC 10. Thus, the 10-point / 9-point AC discrepancy is solved.

Game Settings

All of the other D&D game settings can be used with the Rules Cyclopeda coupled with this addendum. There is a class equivalent for all classes found in AD&D (original and 2nd Edition). You must keep in mind that high level characters in the Rules Cyclopeda have higher levels than those in other forms of D&D. After 12th level, a Rules Cyclopeda character has three levels for every level an AD&D character would have. Most classes from Third Edition are represented as well, though the sorcerer class poses some difficulty. All of the important monsters you need are listed in the Rules Cyclopeda. Most game settings contain flavor which can be used with any sort of rules system. Thus, a DM should have no difficulty running a Rules Cyclopeda campaign set in the World of Greyhawk, the Forgotten Realms, or even more exotic settings. Settings that are psionic-heavy, like Dark Sun, may not be especially suitable for a Rules Cyclopeda campaign, however.

Modules

Modules written for AD&D can be used almost as-is for a Rules Cyclopeda game. NPCs of all classes except for magic-user should have one hit point subtracted per hit die. Keep in mind that traits like ThAC0, saving throws, spells, AC, and other factors are slightly different between editions, but not frightfully so. Using modules from Third Edition would be a greater challenge because the game system is extremely different compared to other forms of D&D existing in the 20th century. For the most part, running an old module shouldn't be a problem.

Game Books

There are probably thousands of game books pertaining to D&D that can be used for inspiration. Actual changes in rules should not be used, but other types of information might prove useful. For instance, the AD&D 2nd Edition class kits may not be suitable from a rules standpoint, but may be useful for ideas for different character types that can be roleplayed.

Dragon Magazines

Another source of inspiration are the 360 or so issues of Dragon Magazine. These magazines contain countless character classes, spells, monsters, rulings, modules, and other game materials. Because the differences in earlier D&D are so miniscule, most material should be suitable for a game featuring the Rules Cyclopeda, if the DM wants to add complexity.

Final Word

The intent is not to make the D&D Rules Cyclopeda a lesser clone of AD&D. If you find that you're adding so many rules and drawing so many things from AD&D, you may just want to switch over to that system. The idea is that you start with a campaign that draws straight from the Rules Cyclopeda while adding one change - divorcing character race from character class. After that, as DM, add whatever elements you want to your particular game such that it represents exactly the kind of D&D you want to play. By starting with something simple, you can add complexity as the campaign progresses and as the players are ready for it. With this, you can essentially reinvent D&D, having the progress of your campaign mimic the slow incremental changes that the game has seen over four decades. What you end up with will be uniquely yours and your group's. By the end of a campaign, you will have made an entirely new game just for your group, with its own idiosyncrasies, house rulings, ideas, and flavor. This effort is not unlike the original campaigns that took place in the beginning days of Dungeons & Dragons.
